Officials warn of training cuts, base closures if sequestration continues

Service leaders warn that if sequestration is not ended, the military will see cuts in training and the closure of bases, among other measures. 'And if we, as a nation, choose the wrong path, it may severely damage our force, further reduce our readiness, and hamper our national security, and do it for years to come. Unfortunately, today we face an unpanaleled threat to our readiness, capabilities and solder and family programs,' said Army Secretary, John McHugh at a Senate subcommittee hearing last week. Advisor: Boosting reserve would preserve apability and budget cuts

Defense budget cuts sould mean a reduction in active-duty service members, within would not be in the best interest of national security, according to Armold Prusaro. 'If you are living in a constrained-resource environment and the active-duty military is going to get smaller and smaller, as I believe it will ... then we ought to be thinking about not losing that capability altogether, but preserving it in the [National] Guard and reserve,' he said. ## Lawmaker readies bill to amend authorization for use of force

Rep. Adam Schiff, D-Calif., is preparing legislation that would repeal authority Presidents George W. Bush and Barack Obama have both relied on to wage war against those involved in the planning or implementation of terrorist attacks. Schiff argues that the Authorization for Use of Military Force, passed unanimously in the days after the 9/11 terrorist attacks, is now outdated and has been too open to broad interpretation to remain in force as is.
